Sustainable Solano holding community day at Rocky Hill Trail

By Daily Republic Staff

VACAVILLE — Learn about native plants, rainwater capture and other environmental solutions during a Community Day Along Rocky Hill Trail on Aug. 20.

The community day runs from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. The entrance to the trail is at 715 Markham Ave.

"The community day will give participants an opportunity to visit the Rocky Hill Trail – a walking and biking trail that connects neighborhoods in Vacaville's Markham neighborhood – while learning about the environmental challenges that face our urban spaces, including poor air quality, water quality and the heat-island effect," event host Sustainable Solano said in a statement.

The event will include presentations from SuSol interns, at noon and 1:30 p.m., on native plants and rainwater capture, which are possible solutions to help to address some environmental concerns.

"Through the fellowship, high school students interested in exploring environmental issues will be able to study environmental and health information for the local community, discuss challenges and potential solutions, and participate in four hands-on workshops to help beautify the Rocky Hill Trail while planting native plants and capturing rainwater to mitigate some of those challenges," Sustainable Solano said.

The program is funded through the Environmental Justice Small Grants Program, administered by the California Environmental Protection Agency.
