Bright sunshine and 80-degree temperatures set the stage Saturday for the inaugural Ag & Art Earth Day Celebration in Andrews Park in Vacaville.

From a miniature train offering rides at the CreekWalk to vendors and food trucks and informational booths lining the pathway up to the amphitheater, there was a little something for every celebrant.

Including an abundance of musical performers.

Near the CreekWalk, Live Music Center folks rocked out to Lenny Kravitz's "Are you gonna go my way?"

Up top near the amphitheater, School of Rock performers covered Green Day's rollicking "American Idiot" and Guns N' Roses' "Sweet Child O' Mine."

In between, hundreds enjoyed talks with local farmers in the Ag Tent, arts and crafts and scouring information on local agricultural and environmental resources, like Sustainable Solano.

At the Solano Land Trust tent, there were pamphlets galore, plush eagles and a bevy of women eagerly sharing knowledge of trails and treks and other activities on the horizon. There's new parks underway, plans for a center, fundraisers and fun.

“We’ve talked to a lot of people. There was a lot of curiosity about the Land Trust and what the Land Trust does,” shared Michelle Dickey with Solano Land Trust. “We’ve had the opportunity to promote our upcoming events, like the new park we’re trying to get open.”

Judging by the crowd — at least a few hundred at any given moment — the inaugural event will likely have a sophomore attempt. Temperatures felt like summertime, families gathered on the lawns, kids played, dogs frolicked and conversations about anything and everything flowed.

Tina Brown of Vacaville, for one, expressed joy in simply being out and about and taking a moment for herself.

” I’m enjoying it,” she shared. “Just trying to come out here and show support for Vacaville.”

The diverse array of activities and different types of live music, she said, made her day.

The event was sponsored by Ag & Art Magazine, Ag & Art Film Festival and Uptown Fox Events.
