FAIRFIELD — Sustainable Solano's Youth Air Protectors on Sunday will present their final projects showing reimagined streetscapes that would "support more pedestrian-friendly, green streets that would lead to cleaner air."

The presentations are set for 12:30 p.m. at the Fairfield Civic Center Library.

For Fairfield High School students who wish to be part of the Youth Air Protectors program, applications will be accepted starting Sept. 7.

"This will be an exciting few months for high school interns as they learn about air quality issues in Fairfield and seek solutions, participate in supporting community forums around creating an air quality action plan, and get hands-on experience with beautification projects that help create a more walkable city with more shade and trees," Sustainable Solano said in a statement.
